A Remarkable Fall List

THE TECHNIQUE OF THOMAS HARDY

By Joseph W. Beach

A new study of Hardy's novels for all lovers of English literature. This book discusses the structural style of the author in each of his novels and shows the gradual subordination of artifice to art in Hardy's successive writings. The reader who is interested in noting the various methods of novel-writing employed by one great author will enjoy this volume on literary craftsmanship. Mr. Beach's work is an aid to the better appreciation of good books.

The New Appreciation of the Bible

By WILLARD C. SELLECK

MR. SELLECK'S book presents the modern point of view in regard to the Bible. Written in a thoroughly popular style, it exhibits the results of a careful historical criticism, and shows how modern methods of study lead to a more perfect appreciation of the biblical writings, in an ethical and religious, as well as in a purely cultural, way. The author is wholly reverent, yet perfectly fearless and thoroughly confident that the broad views he advances will finally become universal.

Evolution, the Bible, and Religion

By
FREDERIC J. GURNEY

In this pamphlet the author has set forth in a masterful way the modern point of view on the relation between religious faith and science. He treats his subject reverently and constructively, in a spirit of fairness to both.

A careful reading of this pamphlet will help one to a reasonable point of view, from which can be seen the facts of nature as they are, the books of the Bible in their historical setting, and religion as a vital concern.

The Belief in God and Immortality

By JAMES H. LEUBA

Professor of Psychology in Bryn Mawr College
Author of "A Psychological Study of Religion"

Cloth, Price $2.50

This book consists of three parts. The first is a scholarly investigation of the origins of the idea of immortality.

Parts II and III are those of chief interest to the general public. Part II consists of statistics of belief in personal immortality and in a God with whom one may hold personal relations.

Part III treats of the present Utility of the Belief in God and in Immortality, and points to a minimum requirement that would save religion from being in conflict with science.

Press Opinions

"It is a book which every clergyman, as well as every one interested in the psychology of religion and in the future of religion, should read and ponder. For Professor Leuba has made a contribution to our knowledge of religious belief that is of very considerable significance." —Prof. James B. Pratt, in the American Journal of Theology.

"It is an honest effort . . . . done with scientific precision and love of truth. Such an investigation, wherever its results may now seem to lead, tends surely towards an ultimate good."—The Christian Register, Boston.

"His more important conclusions are quite well established."—The American Anthropologist.

A Christian's Appreciation of Other Faiths

By REV. GILBERT REID, D. D.

Author of "China at a Glance," "China Captive or Free," Etc.

Cloth, $2.50. Pages 360

Dr. Reid is the Director of the International Institute of Shanghai, China, where he was established before and during the Great World War. His social and political relations with the Orient during the trying period of China's neutrality created in him a spirit of international understanding which broke down all sense of separateness in human life, particularly in spiritual matters. His book is inspiring to every sincere student of the science of religion and will do much to establish the new order of human fellowship.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH

A Scientific and Social Approach to Denominational Co-operation and Unity

By A. C. ZUMBRUNNEN

This study is primarily concerned with the problem of uniting the various denominations into one body. It first considers denominational unity, its causes, and some of the things that show a trend in that direction. In the second place it considers the rise, types, and activities of Community Churches, how they seek to adapt themselves to the conditions that confront them, the fact that denominational unity exists in them, how they bring this about, and what in this newly evolving type of church is to be found the probable method of approach to and a basis of reaching denominational unity.
